THE "ATHLETIC OFFICE."

Description of the Place Where the "Major Sports" are Managed.

We publish in this issue several photographs of the rooms occupied by the Cornell Athletic Association. These offices are situated in the second story of the Blood block, on North Tioga street, formerly known as Masonic hall. The building had played some part in the history of Cornell before the Athletic Association became one of its tenants, for it was there, in the large hall on the fourth floor, that the class of 1897 held its historic freshman banquet. The Association has occupied these quarters for about three years. They are therefore familiar to many graduates of the University, especially to those of recent classes who have held or aspired to hold the management of any of the athletic teams. For older graduates a description of the place where the management of Cornell athletics is carried on may be of interest.

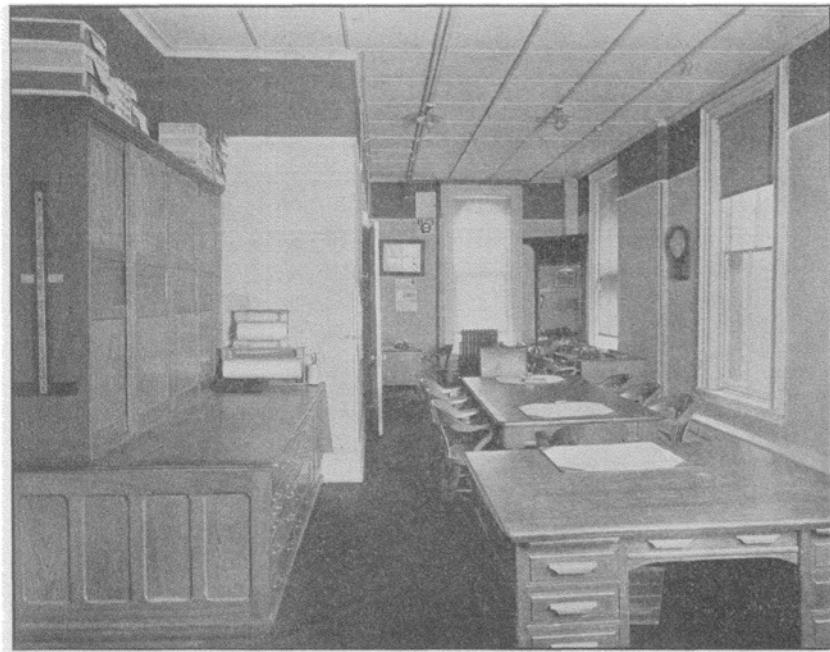

In the old days, when football, baseball, rowing and track athletics, as well as the musical clubs and the Masque, were all run as separate enterprises, none of them had any quarters worth mentioning. Their present organization dates from the appointment of a graduate manager in 1901. On July 1 of that year the office of the Cornell University Athletic Association was first opened. This office was shared from the beginning by the musical clubs' management. It was situated in the annex of Morse hall, on the campus, in the room now occupied by the museum of the department of chemistry. This room was obtained from the University through the efforts of Professor L. M. Dennis, at that time President of the Athletic Council. It was the only room then available for the Association. There was not much office equipment to start with—not much more than a roll-top desk, a letter press and a typewriter. These quarters were retained until the fall of the same year, when an office was rented in the Sage block, on State street. This building is the property of the University, being a part of the endowment of the Cornell Infirmary, a gift to the University from William H. Sage and Dean Sage. In the summer of 1903 the ALUMNI NEWS was added to the Cornell enterprises which were managed in this office. The rooms in the Sage block were outgrown after a time, and in May, 1904, the present quarters on Tioga street were leased. During the past year the graduate manager has also had charge of the finances of the Masque. The business done by all these branches of student activity in what is known as the "Athletic Office" amounted last year to about $125,000.

The main office is a large room looking out on Tioga street. This is the headquarters of the graduate manager and his assistants. Adjoining it is another large room, with a big table in the center, where the Athletic Council holds its meetings. Connected with the main office is a small private office used by the graduate manager. Next to it is the room where the accounts are kept. Ticket sales are held at a window of the room last mentioned, and leading to it is a long and narrow vestibule, entered from the outer corridor, where "the line" forms.

Subordinate to the graduate manager are the undergraduate managers of football, baseball, etc., who have desks in the council room. These men are members of the senior class, and each of them has an assistant, a member of the junior class, who generally succeeds him in the management. Next in order is the horde of sophomore competitors, who are anxious to become managers for the sake of election to one of the senior societies. These competitors are expected to make themselves useful at Percy Field or the boat house during the season, and at other times they are supposed to report daily at "the office" for any work which may be assigned them. It is they who turn out at night to "chalk the walks." At the baseball games they retrieve foul balls, and during the football season they stand by with sweaters and noseguards. They are the unskilled laborers of "the office."

A. S. Coelho, a graduate of the College of Agriculture in the class of 1906, has been appointed by the government of the State of São Paulo, Brazil, to make an extensive study of the Manicoba rubber industry, including the culture of the trees and the extraction and preparation of the rubber. An outline of the work to be carried out has already been submitted to the Secretary of Agriculture, who approved of it as fully satisfactory. Mr. Coelho is said to be one of the brightest men that ever came to Cornell from Brazil. He entered the University as a freshman and graduated in three years.

Harry L. Taylor, '88, County Judge of Erie county, will join the law faculty of the University of Buffalo next fall as lecturer on Crimes.

750 IN SUMMER SESSION.

Largest Attendance This Year in the History of the University.

The sixteenth Summer Session of the University opened on July 5, and has now an enrollment of 750, the largest in its history. This is an increase over last year of more than one hundred. No analysis of the kind of attendance indicated by these figures can be made at the present. It is the general impression, however, that the number of students other than those of the regular winter term has largely increased, and that the number of teachers is greater than last year.

The Summer Session, as now carried on, was organized by the adoption by the Board of Trustees on November 8, 1898, of the following resolution:

"The Summer Session shall offer instruction so far as feasible in all subjects in the high school curriculum The primary objects of the Summer Session shall be to furnish instruction to teachers in high schools and academies Instruction in the Summer Session shall be in general in the hands of the professors."

Prior to this action a number of the younger professors and instructors had carried on with success courses of study during the summer with the permission of the university authorities and in the university buildings. From the start the instruction thus given was acceptable and efficient. The system of payment for the teaching was by fees to the individual instructors, and this made the instruction expensive for one wishing to get methods in several subjects, and further mixed up money considerations in an undesirable way. The official recognition on the part of the University of the summer work as a legitimate part of its functions as an educational institution removed all causes of complaint, and secured at the same time a uniform and steady development of all lines of study. The numbers in attendance have steadily increased and the scope of work has been constantly enlarged until there are this year twenty-one departments in which work is offered, with a faculty of sixty-five persons.

There are four distinct classes of persons whose interests are served by the Summer Session: 1. Professors and teachers, superintendents and supervisors. 2. Students regularly enrolled in Cornell or other colleges. 3. Students about to enter college. 4. Persons not professionally engaged in either teaching or study, but interested in any branch of knowledge. All of these different groups are represented this year.

Certain lines of study, for example botany, geography, zoölogy, require field work for their successful prosecution. This class of studies has always been very popular in the summer, and to their followers the situation of Cornell appeals strongly. The beauties of the country round about the University make all work in the open seem like a pastime. Many of the teachers who come are looking forward to examinations with a view to promotions, or to improved certificates or licenses in teaching. This gives special direction to their activity.

The general verdict of members of the teaching staff of the Summer Session is that the work is every bit the equal in quality of that of the winter time, and, in fact, some professors say it is far superior. It is a pleasure to teach mature persons who know just what they wish to get, who can present definite problems or difficulties. It is also a pleasure to teach bright young minds trying to do in six weeks the work which ordinarily is spread over a whole term, or, in some cases, even a year. There is a "go" to everything.

A pleasant and valuable feature of the organization is the calling here for assistance in instructing of members of other institutions. This year twelve are from outside Cornell. In giving instruction on how to teach a subject in secondary schools, a man right from the work has a great advantage. Last year a beginning was made in this direction, and this year three men from the high schools of New York are serving on the faculty.

Outside the regular work of the class room and laboratory, provision has been made for lectures on topics of general interest on each Monday and Wednesday evening. The Monday lectures this year deal with the subject of "Public Health and Preventive Medicine." Professors Gage, Moore, and Chamot are the speakers. The Wednesday lectures are not connected in their character, but deal with various subjects of popular interest. There is an organ recital in the Sage Chapel on every Tuesday and Thursday evening. The younger portion of the population finds recreation in dancing in the Sage gymnasium. Excursions, either scientific or for pure fun, or both, are made almost daily.

Persons who are here for the first time are enthusiastic over the beauty of the place, the spirit which pervades the university community, the opportunities for every sort of activity of mind and body. Old friends returning find all these and the added charm of renewing old associations. Few, indeed, are those who, turning from a gorgeous sunset, viewed back of the Library, to the Chapel with its graceful symbolism of decorative mosaic, pass from the inspiring and uplifting strains of the organ without a peace and contentment of mind and soul which make a fitting close to a busy and happy day.

Receiver for Publishers.

At a special term of the Supreme Court in Binghamton on July 13, Justice George F. Lyon appointed William L. Packard, of Hornell, temporary receiver of the Ithaca Publishing Company, publisher of the Ithaca Daily News. The appointment was made upon the application of Duncan C. Lee, Roe L. Hendrick, J. Franklin Rogers and Luzerne Coville, directors of the company. The occasion for this move was the action of the First National Bank of Ithaca, whose directors sought to recover $7,000, represented by notes guaranteed by a syndicate of local business men. The bank obtained a judgment and proceeded to levy on the property, in order to sell. The company was not able to satisfy the judgment immediately and, to prevent a forced sale, which meant the sacrifice of valuable assets, the directors petitioned the court for a temporary receiver, with authority to continue the business.

Another Suggestion.

John Ihlder, '00, of Grand Rapids, Mich., writes: "A short time ago the News published a letter from an old grad calling for a third verse to 'Alma Mater' which will contain something more than a description of the University's situation," and he suggests the following:

Far above life's dust of battle,
Rise thy strength and truth;
Thine the glory of our triumphs,
Mother of our youth.

CHORUS.

Strong and true, thy sons forever
Shall they praises tell,
Hail to thee, our Alma Mater,
Hail! All hail! Cornell.

THE COSMOPOLITAN ANNUAL.

First Volume Published by Cornell's International Organization.

The Cosmopolitan Club of Cornell gave new evidence of its vigor by publishing, at the close of the college year, the first volume of The Cosmopolitan Annual. As the name of the publication indicates, it is the club's intention to bring out a new volume every year. The book contains a directory of present and past members, and copies of the addresses which have been delivered before the club during the past year, including a paper by former President Andrew D. White on the future work of the Hague Conference, and a talk by Lieutenant-Commander Juan S. Atwell, of the Argentine navy, on the Argentine Republic. The volume is one of more than a hundred pages, and resembles in size the Cornellian of the early '80's. Its contents show how active the club, still less than three years old, has become in the life of Cornell, and how much its existence must mean to the many foreign students of the University. The membership this year was almost two hundred, about half of the members being natives of twenty-five foreign countries. The club occupies rooms on the ground floor of the building at 313 Eddy street, which are comfortably fitted up and are decorated in part with the flags of various nations.

The frontispiece of the Annual is a portrait of Modesto Quiroga, of San Luis, Argentine Republic, the founder of the club, who was a graduate student in the College of Agriculture from 1903 to 1905. Professor Thomas F. Hunt contributes a biographical sketch of Mr. Quiroga, in which he says:

"Those of us who have been accustomed to the freedom of thought and expression characteristic of this country can scarcely realize what it means to a man reared in a country having a dominant religious faith, to which all are supposed to pay homage, to be suddenly placed in this freer atmosphere. Discussing this question with a foreigner, he said to me: 'I do not look upon the United States as a nation. I look upon it as a new system of thought.'

"Lest this article may fall under the eye of someone unacquainted with the purpose of the Cosmopolitan Club, it should be stated that while Quiroga was an idealist he was not a visionary. Whatever may have been his philosophic dreams, the Cosmopolitan Club was born out of the necessity for the welfare of those students who are coming in constantly increasing numbers to the United States for scientific and technical training. The need and importance of such a club for this purpose none comprehended more clearly than Quiroga. His sound judgment in this matter, the experience of four years most fully attests.

"But he saw further, that in promoting the material, educational, social and moral welfare of these students from other countries, there lay a great opportunity. Many of them are the picked scholars of their respective countries sent hither under governmental auspices: Whatever the motive which has caused them to gather from the four corners of the earth, many, if not most of them, are destined in future years to occupy positions of state or to be men of influence in private walks of life. The far-reaching influence [of] that knowledge of the different national viewpoints and the trade opportunities which comes from close association and discussion in a club of this kind, cannot be fully estimated, not to mention the greater influence of personal and fraternal acquaintance between men of state in preventing misunderstandings between nations and in promoting commerce and peace. There is already evidence to believe that this was no idle dream. In passing, it may perhaps not be too much to say that even the famous democracy of Cornell University life has been further broadened by this beneficent club during the past three years."

Quiroga's idea has been followed elsewhere, and there are now Cosmopolitan Clubs at the Universities of Wisconsin, Michigan and Illinois.

One of the most interesting features of the book is a collection of group photographs of various foreign colonies at Cornell. Among these are the Argentine colony, consisting of ten men; the Chinese, 18; the Hindustanee, 10, and the Philippine, 12. During the past year the club has continued its custom of holding "national nights" when the entertainment is under the charge of the men of a certain country. A considerable sum of money has been collected toward the erection of a new clubhouse, as the present quarters have become too small.

STUDENT DISTRIBUTION.

Large Eastern Universities Not Growing Less National.

Some interesting facts are given by Mr. Rudolf Tombo, jr., the registrar of Columbia University, in an article in the New York Evening Post on the geographical distribution of the student body of a number of prominent colleges and universities. It is generally supposed, he says, that the number of Western students at Eastern institutions is declining by reason of the rapidly developing state universities of the Middle West; in reality the contrary is nearer the truth. He says:

Taking six Eastern universities—Columbia, Cornell, Harvard, Pennsylvania, Princeton, Yale—as a whole, it is seen that they are more than holding their own in sections outside of the north Atlantic division, this being especially true of the north central division, which includes a considerable number of States with flourishing State universities. Calculated on a percentage basis, the total gain of these six universities in their own division during the past year amounted to 3.51 per cent., as against a gain of 5.73 per cent. outside of the division.

During the past year all of the six institutions, with the exception of Cornell, have experienced a gain in the south Atlantic States; in the south central division gains by Columbia, Cornell, and Harvard more than compensate for the losses of Pennsylvania, Princeton, and Yale; in the north central section all of them, with the exception of Cornell and Princeton, show substantial gains; in the western division (i. e., the far Western States) Columbia alone has suffered a loss, while in foreign countries Columbia and Princeton have had a slight decrease compared with the preceding year.

Comparing the geographical distribution of the student body of these universities with that of two years ago, one may observe that the most substantial gains have been made by Columbia, Pennsylvania, and Yale in the north central division, by Yale in the Western division, and by Columbia, Cornell, Harvard and Pennsylvania in foreign countries. At Columbia the attendance from outside the north Atlantic States has increased from 15.07 to 19.15 per cent. during the last five years.

Including the State Universities of California, Illinois, Michigan, Ohio, Virginia, and Wisconsin in the calculations, the only one of these attracting students in any number from the North Atlantic division is Michigan, whose representation from this section has increased 28 per cent. in two years, at the present time amounting to 505, of whom no less than 277 hail from New York State. This is a larger Empire State delegation than can be found at Williams, Dartmouth, or Brown, although all of these New England colleges draw a considerable number of students from New York.

Of the Eastern universities mentioned above, Pennsylvania has the largest percentage of enrolment from its own State, namely 69 per cent.; Columbia follows with 64 per cent., and then come Cornell with 58 per cent., Harvard with 53 per cent., Yale with 34 per cent., and Princeton with only 21 per cent. At the universities of the Middle West, the percentage is very much higher, except in the case of Michigan, where 55 per cent. of the students hail from the State in which the institution is located, the percentage for Wisconsin, Illinois, and Ohio being 82 per cent., 84 per cent., and 91 per cent., respectively, showing that the student clientele of the three middle Western State universities last mentioned is much more local in character than that of any of the Eastern colleges or universities under discussion.

In the south Atlantic division the order of the six Eastern universities is Cornell, Pennsylvania, Harvard, Columbia, Princeton, Yale—Michigan being the only one of the Western universities mentioned to make a fair showing in these States, while Lehigh has a larger following in this section than either Princeton, Yale, or Michigan. In the south central division, the order is Harvard, Cornell, Columbia, Yale, Michigan, Pennsylvania, Princeton, Illinois, the last-named and Michigan being the only two of the Western universities under consideration to make a fair showing in this section of the country. The State of Kentucky sends by far the largest delegations to the institutions, taken as a whole, followed by the States of Texas, Tennessee, and Alabama. In the north central division the order for the Eastern universities is Yale, Harvard, Cornell, Columbia, Princeton, Pennsylvania. For the New England colleges the order is Dartmouth, Williams, Amherst, Brown, all of which are, of course, surpassed by the Eastern universities, while just as naturally Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, and Ohio (ranking in the order given) have a larger clientele in this section than any of the Eastern universities.

In the Western division Michigan is in the lead, with Harvard and Columbia, each of which attracts more than 100 students from this section; following are Yale, Cornell, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Princeton; the remaining institutions attracting only a few students from this section of the country, with the exception of Dartmouth, which is well represented in Colorado. Of the States in this division, Colorado and California send by far the largest delegations to the Eastern institutions, the representation from the latter not having suffered any appreciable diminution during the past year, in spite of the San Francisco disaster. Cornell leads in the number of students from the insular possessions, followed by Illinois.

The total number of students from foreign countries at fourteen of the representative institutions mentioned above has grown in one year from 792 to 897, the continent of Asia showing the largest actual gain—from 171 to 256—although South America has increased its delegation in one year by 40 per cent. Pennsylvania has the largest foreign clientele this year, followed by Columbia, Cornell, Harvard, each of which attracts more than one hundred foreigners.

The figures prove that the representative universities of the East are not growing less national in character, that the leading New England colleges are growing more so every year, that the State universities of the Middle West, with the sole exception of Michigan, are much more local in character than their sister institutions in the East—and the same is true of Virginia, and to an even greater degree of the other Southern universities—and, finally, that the representation of foreigners at our prominent institutions of learning is constantly on the increase.

Editor

Woodford Patterson, '95.

Entered as Second-Class Matter at Ithaca, N. Y.

Ithaca, N. Y., July 24, 1907.

The offices of the CORNELL ALUMNI NEWS have been removed from the building at No. 111 North Tioga street to the building of the Ithaca Trust Company, directly across the way, at No. 110 North Tioga street. The new quarters are larger and more suitable than the old for the editorial and business departments of the paper.

THE ALUMNI TRUSTEES.

In their report this year Messrs. Turner and Treman, alumni trustees, said:

"Permit us to suggest to the alumni that in the future they make more use of their alumni representatives in the Board of Trustees and keep in closer touch with them. If the alumni, instead of accepting rumor or newspaper report regarding University matters as true, would go or write directly to their trustee representatives for the facts many misrepresentations and hasty judgments would be avoided and the Board and the alumni would be at all times much more nearly in accord."

It appears that some of us make too little use of our system of representative government. The privilege which we have of electing members of the Board of Trustees can have but little value if we do not let these representatives know what our opinions are. An alumnus who has a criticism or a suggestion to make regarding the University cannot make it more effectively than through the alumni trustees. That is what these officers are for—to give the graduates of Cornell University a voice in its government. Except for them the Board would be almost wholly a self-perpetuating body. When Cornell adopted this system of alumni representation the system was an experiment. Since then it has been adopted by more than one college or university. Other alumni bodies are now asking for the privilege of a share in the control of their institutions. They all seem to believe that the way to keep a college going ahead in the right direction is to provide a means by which its best friends can give the college the direct benefit of their thought and experience.

Probably the invitation quoted above would not have been made if our alumni trustees had not felt that something was lacking to complete the plan contemplated by the framers of Cornell's charter. Desiring, as they presumably do, to be truly representative of the alumni, they have a right to expect that the alumni will apply to them for information and go to them with criticisms. Newspaper reports about the University cannot always be trusted. We have had proof of this within the past year. Criticism or denunciation of the acts of the Board of Trustees, if based on newspaper report and on that alone, is unjust to the Board. For an alumnus to assuage in such criticism without first making an effort to learn the truth is unfair to his elected representatives on the Board.

We have had during the past year examples of such unwarranted criticism.

The election of a man by the alumni as a trustee creates a presumption that he is trustworthy. His acceptance of the office indicates his willingness to be representative of his constituents. He is an agent, and he can only do his duty as such if his principals put their trust in him and give him plain instructions. The names of the alumni trustees are printed on page 4 of the University Register.

Literary Notes.

Thomas S. Jones, jr., '04, has in preparation a third volume of poems. It will include verses which have been published in various magazines, and will be larger than either of Mr. Jones's former books, "The Path o' Dreams" and "The Rose-Jar." The new volume will be published by George William Browning, at Clinton, N. Y., under the title, "From Quiet Valleys."

Thomas Nelson Page, the portrayer of Southern life, is the subject of an article by Professor Edwin Mims, Ph. D. '00, of Trinity College, Durham, N. C., in the July Number of the Atlantic Monthly. A short biography precedes an appreciative study of Mr. Page's writings.

In Horticulture for May 25, Professor William Trelease, '80, of Washington University, St. Louis, Mo., has an article on the Swedish naturalist Linne or Linnaeus, the two hundredth anniversary of whose birth was celebrated this year.

The Architectural Record for July contains an article on the College of Architecture of Cornell University by Mrs. Gertrude S. Martin. The article is illustrated with campus views and reproductions of the work of students of the college. It tells in a very interesting way how architecture is taught at Cornell and about student life at Ithaca.

Announcement has been made at New Haven that the Yale summer school will be abandoned after this year.

THE NEW CHI PSI HOUSE.

Plans for the Building Completed by the Architects.

Messrs. Gibb & Waltz, architects of Ithaca, have completed the plans and specifications for the new chapter house of the Chi Psi fraternity at Cornell. The structure will be erected on the site of the former McGraw-Fiske Mansion, which was destroyed by fire last December. No attempt has been made by the architects to reproduce any of the features of the former building. They have designed the house for fraternity occupancy, and in this respect it will be much superior to the one which was destroyed, although its cost will be less. Several thousand dollars worth of building material was recovered from the ruins and a great deal of this will be used.

The new chapter house, while it will stand on the same site as the old, will face in a slightly different direction—more toward the lake than toward the city. The main entrance will be on the east side, toward the University. The driveway will enter a court partly enclosed by wings. The entrance lobby will open into a large main hall, on the left of which will be the library, a room about thirty-eight feet square, and on the right the dining room, whose proportions will be similar. The second floor will be given up to studies and sleeping rooms. On the side of the house overlooking the lake will be two covered porches or loggias and an enclosed terrace. The house, while not so lofty as the one whose place it takes, will be quite as spacious and will be the largest of its kind in Ithaca. The first story will be of stone and the second of brick, stuccoed. There will be a heavy, overhanging cornice and the roof will be of Spanish tile. The architects' drawings indicate a building quite as beautiful as the one which was lost.

It will take about two weeks for the contractors to complete their figures, and the work of construction will then begin. The building is expected to be ready for the decorators by August of next year.

Professor Charles H. Hull sailed from New York on July 6 for Antwerp, expecting to spend most of the summer in historical investigations among British archives.

David Alexander Adams Durward, a graduate of the College of Agriculture in the class of 1906, was drowned in the Connecticut river on July 2 by the upsetting of a canoe. Durward and a friend, both teachers in the Mount Hermon School for Boys, were canoeing on the river when they were capsized by an eddy. Both clung to the overturned craft, but be-

Durward was a native of Scotland and was born on October 17, 1881. He was an only son. His parents live at Claremont, N. H. From the Claremont High School he entered the New Hampshire State College at Durham, where he remained two years. In 1903 he came to Cornell and he received his degree from the College of Agriculture at the end of three years. While in college he was a member of the Cayuga Club and in his senior year he played on the varsity lacrosse team. Last October he became instructor in horticulture at the National Farm School in Pennsylvania. He left there in January for the Mount Hermon School, where he took charge of the department of agriculture and nature study. He was unmarried.

FLORENCE Z. BAILEY.

Miss Florence Zephyrine Bailey died at the home of her father, the Rev. A. F. Bailey, of Barre, Mass., on July 6, after a short illness. She was 38 years old. Before her illness she had been teaching in Stamford, Conn. Miss Bailey was a special student in Cornell in 1895-97.

Cornell Affairs in Chicago.

A committee has been appointed by the Board of Governors of the Cornell University Association of Chicago to provide the local newspapers with truthful and accurate accounts of Cornell affairs in Chicago and in Ithaca. The chairman of this "publicity committee" is Charles S. Young, '95, 1245 Railway Exchange building, and his assistants are Edward T. Wilder, '06, 212 La Salle street, and Roger Vail, '06, 403 La Salle street. This committee is expected to co-operate with the publications at Cornell both in sending and receiving news.

To celebrate Cornell's victory in the intercollegiate boat races at Poughkeepsie, the Cornell alumni of Chicago and their friends assembled at River-view Park on Monday evening, July 1. A special Cornell concert was given by Conway's band, of Ithaca, and former members of the Glee Club were called on for Cornell songs.

Chicago's Outing.

CHICAGO.—There has been a general demand from Cornell men throughout the city for some sort of outing or field day, so that the association could get together for ball games and other sports during the afternoon, and have singing and a general good time during the evening. As a result the Board of Governors has appointed a committee of five to set a day and make all arrangements for an affair.

A trip down the Drainage Canal to Columbia Park in a large and luxurious steamer has been arranged for, with plenty of entertainment and refreshments on the way down. Once at Columbia Park, a series of championship indoor and outdoor ball games has been planned. A crew race, bowling championship and other stunts will also be pulled off.

Saturday, August 10, has been selected for the celebration, and we will have the park all to ourselves on that date. This is strictly a stag affair, and the park is just the place to cut loose for a good time. Those who are so fortunate as to obtain tickets on the steamer will leave at 1 o'clock P. M. on Saturday, August 10, for the trip down the river. We can get 125 on board the steamer and a demand for tickets indicates that some will have to take the trolley or we will have to get a larger boat. You are urged to subscribe for one of the steamboat tickets as soon as called upon by one of the men having these tickets, and if for any reason you are overlooked for more than a week after receiving this letter notify one of the Committee whose address is given below, or come to one of the Wednesday noon affairs at the Grand Pacific Hotel, where the box office will be doing a large business. These tickets will be $1.00 each and will cover transportation both ways on the boat. The management of the Park will have special refreshments prepared which will be served a la carte.

Returns at present indicate 150 to 200 in attendance and the most enthusiastic and liveliest crowd ever turned out to a Cornell gathering. Save all your good times from now until August 10 and blow them all in on that date. Plan to be there by taking an early chance on one of the tickets. FIELD DAY COMMITTEE.

Notice to Teachers.

Applications are being made at the office of the Board of Recommendations of the University Faculty almost every day for well equipped men as teachers in various lines of work. Professor Bristol, the chairman of the board, is often hindered in his efforts to assist teachers to promotion by lack of knowledge of their addresses or by their failure to notify him of their appointment to new places. Whenever he has written to the school authorities in behalf of a candidate, the applicant should take pains to acquaint him with the result. Unless the information supplied by him is reliable and is given promptly, it ceases to have much value.

Before the football season opens the Groton Bridge Company will erect on Percy Field a new portable steel stand, to accommodate three thousand persons. It is expected to be much more economical than wooden stands, because it will not need repairs so often. It can be transferred to the new athletic field when the time comes.

Cornell Men at Harvard.

The following Cornell men received degrees at the recent commencement of Harvard University: Ph. D., F. W. C. Lieder, '02; A. M., E. H. Riedel, '02; M. S., R. E. Sheldon, '04; Bachelors of Law, F. S. Auerbach, '04; W. L. Bowman, '04, and C. Mc-Nitt, '04.

At its one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary celebration in June, Washington College, at Chestertown, Md., conferred the degree of Doctor of Laws upon Professor George Lincoln Burr.

The summer school of drawing and applied art organized by the Prang Educational Company is now in session at Glenwood on Cayuga Lake. About forty persons are in attendance.

Willard Abbott, of Cleveland, a graduate of the University of Rochester in the class of 1858, who died early this month, bequeathed $50,000 to that university.

The bridge south of Barnes hall is being made wider.

A Contrast.

The address by President Schurman of Cornell, at the Commencement exercises at Ithaca, contrasts most refreshingly with the asinine talk of Chancellor Day at Syracuse University. President Schurman's address is cast in a thoughtful and patriotic mold and it might well be reprinted and sent throughout the country for general reading.—Newark Star.
