ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The research reported herein was performed pursuant to a contract between Yale University and the United States Office of Education, Department of Health, Education and Welfare. I am grateful to the Office of Education for the opportunity to make this study.

I am also grateful to my professors at Yale who gave me the background to undertake this study and have always been unsparing in their time and encouragement: Professors Bernard Bloch, William Cornyn, Isidore Dyen, Floyd Lounsbury, Samuel Martin, and Rulon Wells.

In addition, thanks are due to the many Filipinos who have helped me in analyzing Cebuano. Of those who worked with me for a period of several months, I am especially indebted to Rev. Pedro Raterta from Dumaguete City; Miss Guadalupe Barcelo, Miss Ida Operario and Mr. Reynoso Belarmino, of Cebu City; Mr. Jose Vilo, Mr. Ludovico Villamor, and Mr. Crisostomo Gamelo from Argao, Cebu; Atty. Avelino Estorco from Guihulngan, Negros; and Mr. Alexander Maglasang, Ormoc City, Leyte. These informants not only collected, transcribed and checked the accuracy of the materials, but also discussed the analysis with me and made innumerable valuable suggestions and corrections. They never balked at doing anything difficult, were open to criticism, and put in many hours of overtime. This analysis is as much their work as mine. The final decisions, however, were my own, and any shortcomings are my own responsibility. I also owe thanks to some of those who worked with me for a short period of time: Mrs. Kilomena Ceniza, Ormoc City, Leyte; Miss Lourdes Gonzales, Miss Fe Operario, and Mr. George Bragat, Cebu City; Mr. Aquino Gambe, Initao, Misamis Oriental; and Miss Henedina Fuentes, Tubigon, Bohol. Thanks are due to the patient and painstaking typists who typed this difficult manuscript rapidly and accurately in many drafts: Mrs. Aurora Lingan, Miss Marcelina Pancipanci and Miss Lucita Jongoy.

This work is the draft of a description of Cebuano to be published soon. It has not been read by anyone except those who worked in the preparation. I have, therefore, had it mimeographed to be read before publication by those who would be interested in making criticisms.

I would be very grateful for all corrections or suggestions for improvement, either with regard to the facts of Cebuano or with regard to the arrangement or the analysis.

LAZY JOHN

There was a couple many years ago that had a son whom they named John. As John was growing up, his parents were happy, believing that now they would have help in the household. Especially the father was very happy because now he would have help in gathering firewood which was his means of livelihood day by day.

But as John grew up, his father became sad because he was very lazy. He could not be commanded. If you told him to do something, he would not do what he was told. Especially when his parents were not there, he would simply keep on sitting around and roaming about, but nothing could be done.

One time, when the father saw that John was just the right age to be taken along to gather firewood, he said to him,

"All right, John, put on your short pants because you are going with me to gather firewood. From now on, you will be my helper in gathering firewood, for this is our only way of earning a living so that we can live from day to day."

And so, John went with his father. When they reached the mountains, the father started to cut trees down right away. And then, he would tell John to cut them up in order to have them ready to sell.

But John would not follow the order. Instead of cutting wood, he would rather look for shade, and there he would sleep. The father was very angry because his son was useless. There was nothing he could do. There was no help. He would always just look into space, roam around and sleep. He just wasted food but was of no help in the household.

And as time went by, it happened that John's father died. And John and his mother were the only ones left now. John had already grown up, but, as always, he was lazy. So, in that region he became known by the name "Lazy John".

One time, John went up to the mountains in order to gather firewood because now he was simply forced to follow his father's livelihood. He saw a tree that had a huge hole. And then, he got his axe, and he began to cut the tree down. Then, when he had started to cut the tree down, there was a voice he heard that said,

"John, do not cut me down because I may help you some time."

John was surprised. Whose voice was this? Who was this talking. He turned his head. He turned to his back. He turned to Then again there was a voice which he heard.

"John! Please do not cut me. I will certainly help you some time."

John was still surprised because there was nobody he saw. So, he started cutting again. And then the voice said,

"John, you just stop a moment. Look here in the hole. Put your hand inside it because I have something to give you. Just do not cut me."

hand inside it. And something was placed in his hand. Then when he pulled out his hand, there was a purse which had been put in his hand. He looked at the purse. Then when he looked at it, there was nothing in it. So, he tossed it away. He threw it ahead of him.

But then as he was throwing the purse, there was a jingling of coins; and then as he looked at it, he said,

"Why does this have money when that purse was supposed to be empty?" Gingerly he picked up the purse and looked at it carefully. But there still was nothing in it. So he threw it away again,

"John, this purse is an enchanted purse. You simply shake it out, and then there will be money which will fall out. That is what I am going to give you.

But please! Do not cut me down." John was extremely happy, for imagine, just shake it, and then money falls out. He ran back to his home. Then, when he reached home, he said right away,

How could you ever marry the king's daughter when you are nothing but the son of a poor couple - a mountaineer, yet you want to marry the king's daughter,

"Where are you going?"

"I have some important business with the king,"
the mother said.

And so, she was allowed through. When she got to the king, the king asked her,

"What is your purpose old woman?" And the mother who was trembling and crying as well, said,

The king roared with laughter. He thought that this was a great folly. Then, he said, "What in the world

The poor mother was very worried. She went away sad. She thought, "How could I ever give those ten cartloads of gold?" When she reached home, there was John sitting with his legs wide apart in the living room; and immediately, John said, John burst out laughing, and the mother was amazed.

"What are you worrying for, Mom. That is so easy!" And so, right away, John started to shake out his purse, and much gold fell out. And when he had much gold, he said to his mother, "Mother, go to town. Buy ten carts - that especially-made kind, which have wheels of gold too; all of whose parts are of gold."

THE VAMPIRE OF EL SALVADOR

It was the fiesta of El Salvador. The town was very gay. The sounds of many bands and orchestras mixed together, and the whole town was filled with song and noise. On the evening of the day before it was the gayest, for this was the coronation of the queen who had been chosen and the members of her court. After the coronation, a huge ball followed right away. There were very many people because for this occasion, practically the whole town filled the place to overflowing in order to attend the coronation, especially because it was the governor of the province who would crown the queen. The plaza was very bright because that was where the coronation was held. The houses seemed deserted because Immediately upon finding out, the whole barrio took action right away. There was someone who was sent to the plaza in order to notify the police and the mayor. The coronation broke up, and the people went, each carrying their lights, in order to help look for the missing child. There came to the thoughts of many, including the mother's, that the child had been kidnapped by a witch. So they wound back and forth through the swamps and nipa groves and all places where there was thick grass.

After searching for a long time, they saw a man bending over in the middle of a thick group of nipa palms. When many people had surrounded him and when the brightness of the lanterns cast light on him, the man stood up; and in his arms they saw the child who was already rather weak. But the witch did not stop sucking the child's neck. The able-bodied men attacked him, and they teamed up to beat the man until he let go of the child and fell into the mud of the swamp. The child was immediately brought to the hospital. He had what looked like many pin-pricks in his neck, for the main veins in his neck were pricked by the witch, so that he could easily suck the blood.

The man answered, "From La Libertad."

"How long have you been here?"

"Just since this afternoon, sir."

"Why did you commit this great crime?"

The man answered, "I do not mean to do it, sir. There are times when I long for blood. Blood seems to give off a fragrance to my sense of smell, and there is a power which seems to be what forces me to look for it."

KARANGKAL

I will tell the story about Karangkal.

A long time ago, there was a couple who had a child whom they called Karangkal. Karangkal, when he was born, was a very small child, and his parents thought, "How useless this child is. He is very small. What can he amount to?"

But Karangkal, even when he was still a child, showed unusual abilities because there were many things he did which seemed amazing.

But it was one of these which saddened his parents, for he had a huge appetite. He was a small child, but when he ate, he would eat a whole ganta

Because if they did not cook a sack, he would not get satisfied. So that before long, the parents seemed to feel the sting of poverty. Imagine looking for so much to feed their child who had a big appetite!

So one day, the father said to his wife, "Dear, probably the only thing for us to do in this situation is for me to kill this Karangkal because we are hard up now. We cannot

So one day, Karangkal's father said,

"Karangkal, change into your working clothes. Come along with me. We are going to the forest, for we will cut down trees."

Then when they arrived at the edge of the forest, the father said,

"Karangkal, wait here, okay? I am going up to cut down some trees."

And so, the child waited down at the bottom of the slope, and the father climbed up to the top. Then he cut down a huge tree. And he aimed the tree which he cut down so that it would fall toward Karangkal. Sure enough, before long, the tree fell down, and as it fell, it crashed down directly toward Karangkal. And he said,

"Now you are dead, you child, you!"

Then he went home directly to their house. He did not look any more to see whether Karangkal was dead now or still alive.

And when they went into their house rather sad, because after all, it was their child, even if he would have been a huge problem..... But before long, there was someone calling.

"Dad! Mom!"

So one time, the father said,

"Karangkal, all right, come along with me. We are going to the river because we are going fishing."

My, Karangkal was happy! He jumped right away. He took his ragged shirt and put it on. Then they went to the river.

"Dear, now Karangkal is dead for sure. I am very sad, but what can we do. There is nothing we can do. He was completely torn to pieces there by the crocodile."

Then they were sad, contemplating this very big problem of theirs. Then there is someone calling,

And sure enough, there was the crocodile which was very big.

The mother and father had a hard time thinking how they could kill their child, who instead of being killed by the crocodile, was actually the one who killed the crocodile. So they continued being sad, for now they were again looking for food, one sack each time, two sacks each time, to feed Karangkal.

But one time there was an announcement that there was a huge fish that was washed aground in a certain town in a certain kingdom, and there was no one at all who could

So it was announced that whoever could lift the fish, whoever could drag this fish and could throw it to a distant place so that there would be no more smell in the whole kingdom, he would be given a huge treasure by the king. Besides that he would give him his daughter, the princess, in marriage. And furthermore, he would become the heir to his kingdom. When Karangkal heard this, he said right away,

"Dad, I am going to this kingdom."

And so, Karangkal went to that kingdom. Sure enough, when he went there, there was a huge fish that was washed ashore near the plaza; for the plaza of that kingdom was at the edge of the sea. The people were all running about covering their noses. There was nothing they could do, for they could not pull the fish. But when Karangkal got there, he said to the king right away,

"Your Majesty, I am the one who can guarantee to drag that fish away."

The king laughed, for just imagine, he was still a small child; and yet he claimed he could drag that fish. He was not even as big as your little finger compared to that huge fish.

But Karangkal said,

"Do not worry, so long as you do what you promised, your Majesty, that if I can throw it far away so that it will not bother your kingdom any more, that I will marry your daughter and that you will give

And the king said,

"That can be done. That is my promise."

But the king thought, "What can this child do?" He did not have confidence at all that Karangkal could do it.

Then Karangkal went down from the king's throne, and when he arrived at the plaza, he went to where the tail of the fish was. The people were amazed. "How would this child do it?
What was it that he would do there?" But when Karangkal arrived at the tail of the fish, he took hold of it. Then he lifted it and waved it back and forth for a moment. After he had waved it back and forth, he threw it to a very distant place until the fish could not be seen at all.

which was the hand of the princess so that she might become his wife and the huge treasure that the king had promised.

From that time on, Karangkal became the prince because his wife was the princess of the kingdom. Before long, the king died. Karangkal was the one who became the king, and the kingdom became happy forever after.

THE STORY ABOUT BAKER

The story about the time I was chief is the one about that American Baker in Boljo-on. That American Baker was an ex-soldier. He married one from Boljo-on. When he was there in Boljo-on, he settled there. His business in those days (Baker's) was buying boards because at that time there was not any of this lumber in Cebu yet.

Anyway, one Sunday, Baker was at the cockfights. You know, cockfights with roosters. And then, one of his friends said to him, "Baker, let us go to the feast of Saint Vincent."

Then Baker said, "Not me. I have no friends. Besides, I was not invited. Back home in America, if there is a banquet held, and we are not invited, we do not go," said Baker. (I do not know if that is true.) "At home in America, if there is a banquet held, and we are not invited by the host at the banquet, we certainly do not go."

The one whose last name was Villagonzalo said, "But here I am your friend, friend. I will be the one to take you." "Oh no, not me. I would be ashamed." (For he spoke Visayan well.) "Oh, not me."

Anyway, there he was with that Villagonzalo that took him to the house. He could not help going because they were friends. Later on, there they were in the house where the banquet was held. Anyway, this American man, since he did not have any friends, even though he spoke good Visayan, just sat - in the corner; for he was ashamed because he had not been invited. He just sat. Then many people came there. He did not move. After a while, this priest came in. When the priest came in, the American stood up.

"Good evening, Father." (For he spoke Visayan well.)

The priest did not say anything. Well then, since the priest did not say anything, Baker just sat down again. He sat down. Then, in the middle of the room, they put a small table, two chairs. Then the priest was there, and here, they put some "sopa" (you know, soup). Then here, they put an empty plate, spoon, fork, see? Then they called the priest. The priest was sitting there, and he was paired off with a girl over here, a woman. Then the American just sat over here. There they were, eating. The American still did not say anything, see? (Baker.) Then Baker just looked on.

When they were about half through eating, just about finished, the priest said, "Er. Hey, American, come over here. Eat."

Baker answered, "I will just wait for the second sitting, Father. You finish first."

The priest said, "American, why do you not obey me?"
"Oh no, Father, because you know... Just go on there because I will eat later."

"Ah, American, heretic, protestant, mason." The American Baker was cussed out.

Well, now Baker's head went like this because he was called a heretic, mason, protestant. Does not respect priests. No respect.

he went like this, see?

"What, Father? I am a heretic, protestant?"

"Yes. You are a protestant. Heretic, see?" Then, "You are a protestant, a heretic."

"Er. Is it the Spanish custom that you do not invite people to eat until you are just about through? Why did you not call me when you were beginning to eat? You did not call me until you were through eating. Is that a Spanish custom?"

Anyway then

"Ah, you rebel against the priest."

But then that Baker, he was taller than you are. A big man. Yes, big. He had big biceps. Very big. Big shouldered. That Baker was big. Anyway, the priest, you know, had a tonsure hair. Then because the soup was there; it was there...,

"You, since you are so greedy; you do not invite people until after you have finished eating. Go ahead. Drink that soup." Baker went like that. (He got a good dunking.)

Anyway then the woman that was sitting across from him screamed, "The American has killed the priest!"

Well then, the cooks were carrying clubs like that. They came one after another and clubbed Baker here. Yes, here. They clubbed him here. But then Baker's thigh was very big. (What a big thigh that American had!) So he did not feel the clubs. He was able to take the clubs away. He took the clubs away.. When Baker had the clubs; he gave the people a sound clubbing. All of them jumped up and ran. (They ran.) The table got disarranged, see? Anyway, now the priest ran. Then the American went back home to his place. Well then, the American, Baker, went back home. The American went home right away. ["The banquet happened in a different place?"] "Yes, in a different place." Now anyway, after a while that Villagonzalo who was called Oris Villagonzalo went to Baker.

"Baker."

"Yes."

"Escape!"

"Why?"

"The President ordered it." (At that time it was still a president. He was not called mayor. Now it is a mayor.

Anyway, when they arrived at the house, they tossed the chairs out of the window. Anyway, he still did not do anything. They threw out the chairs. They threw out the beds. Still he did not do anything. But he had some birds, for he raised birds. Then they went and slashed at the birds. Baker felt sorry for the birds that were being slashed at. But if it had just been things, he would not have said anything. They slashed at the birds.

THE CROCODILE WITH A NECKLACE OF RED THREAD

For a long time now Inting had been sharpening his bolo. His face was sullen. A basket could be hung from it. His eyes were staring wildly and were red like the eyes of a vicious cat being approached by a dog while eating a rat. His brown colored shirt could no longer soak up all of the salty sweat which flowed down his body despite the help of the afternoon breeze from the famous Mt. Apo.

He splashed water on the whetstone and then brushed off the dust which remained from the honing. Next he splashed his bolo, then wiped it off with his left hand. He looked at the blade. Its sharpness and smoothness gleamed. He pressed his right thumb-nail against the blade in order to see how sharp it was. Not satisfied, he pulled out some hair and chose a strand. Then he held the end, and suddenly dashed the middle of it against the blade of his bolo. As if nothing had happened, the hair did not catch.

It was well cut. His lips twisted into a bitter smile. He brandished it and suddenly lashed out with it. And the pitiful kalamungay tree near him that was as big around as a leg fell with out knowing the reason, poor thing.

"What is the matter with you, Ting?" restlessly asked Angkay, who was just back from pasturing their carabao, when she saw her husband who seemed to have lost his senses and her cherished kalamungay tree which was cut down.

"What has happened to you?"

"Oh, Kay! He will pass over my dead body before he harms us in taking away . . ."

"What has gotten into your head? What is it you are ranting about?"

"We are completely out of luck, Kay. They are going to take our land away again," Inting answered regretfully.

"Who is it that wants to take it away?" Angkay kept asking uneasily.

"Ah, who else but Mr. Alog," answered Inting snorting. And he gnashed his teeth. "He says we are going to be kicked off, Kay. He says we are his tenants, and we would not give him his share. The Chief says that this land is already registered in Mr. Alog's name."

"Huh? Mis... Mr. Alog?" Angkay's voice grew shrill. "The cheater. Has he not cheated us enough yet?" Tears of anger, frustration and sorrow leaped from her eyes one after another.

"No more of that crying. This cannot be gotten by tears any more. This is what will decide." And Inting looked at his bolo and waved it.

from a small island in the town of Opon, where their father had hung their navels from the rafters of their hut. They had immigrated here as a married couple to the land of promise, driven by their deep yearnings and foresight for the future of their children.

The village of Lanao, when they arrived, was still the home of jungle animals. Its name was not Lanao yet. It was called Campo because it was here that the government workers had camped during the building of the Davao-Cotabato road. The pigs practically came into the houses. The noises they heard were the deer grazing in the gardens of the people who had not fenced their clearings or licking the ashes of the recent bonfires; the cries of the hornbills which are the timepieces of the mountaineers; the moaning of the pungao in the early evening which seemed like groans of ghosts; the shouts of "maho-og ko" (I will fall) of the flying lemurs.

This is what always filled their ears.

Because there were no more parcels of land to be given out by the government. (for they said that all of the lands had owners now - even though they had not been completely measured), Inting and his family were forced to untie the knot in Angkay's skirt where they had wrapped their small savings to pay for a small plot of land which they bought.

The couple knew no time for rest. For uncountable moonlit nights, the couple could be seen toiling together. In order to save time, they always pulled the weeds as they came up.

When they had nearly finished cutting all the big trees down and nearly planted their entire land with abaca, Mr. Alog appeared together with that man with a thinnish body. Without beating around the bush and without explanations the couple was told that that was not the land which they had bought, because that land was not Mr. Alog's but rather that thinnish man's. Despite Inting's explanations that it certainly was theirs, they were threatened with jail instead because they were squatters. The two had many papers they brought along. Those were supposed to be papers to the land which showed that the thinnish man was the owner. They were merely being advised by Mr. Alog that it would be better for them to clear out because there was already a lot of trouble. If they would get out, Mr. Alog would immediately give them the land which was the one he said he had really sold them. If they would not clear out, they would also be put into jail. And further, they would not be given any land by Mr. Alog.

With bowed heads, the couple sadly moved to the land which Mr. Alog had pointed out to them. Actually, that land was a good type of land, but it was seven kilometers from the highway. The land was at the edge of the river which the natives called Marbel, and that was also the name of the village.

Here in this land they started farming all over from scratch, and they added to their strivings, enthusiasm, and diligence instead of losing interest.

Various calamities took turns in barring their success. Perhaps the Almighty wished to measure how far their suffering and patience could go. The abaca which they always planted to the end of the area they had been able to clear was affected by abaca disease just as it was reaching maturity. Because the abaca did not do well, they planted rice and corn instead. But just when it was ready for harvest, a dreadful locust plague descended on it. Therefore, they tried something else. Since they had no luck with raising crops, they resorted to raising livestock. But God made it a point to tease them. When Angkay was just beginning to sell eggs from their hens and ducks and the fat cocks, suddenly the terrible crocodile appeared in the Marbel River.

It was morning. Angkay was washing at the river with her seven-year-old daughter. The child was sitting on a rock amusing herself by playing. Then suddenly it was the child's screams which Angkay heard. Then when Angkay looked, the child was already being dragged away by a huge crocodile. Angkay jumped up quickly and came to the aid of the child. She held the body of the child, and she and the crocodile tugged against each other. She got the child, to be sure, but, nevertheless, one of the child's thighs was left in the animal's mouth. No sooner had the child gotten to the hospital when it died.

Inting nearly went crazy with grief. Immediately, he looked for the enemy in order to avenge his beloved daughter.

One time Inting could not finish his lunch. He grabbed his bolo which he hung on the post near their dining place when he heard the squealing of their pig. What he saw was the pig wriggling about in the mouth of the crocodile with its voice squealing. Because of his anger, he right away struck it on its back, but despite the slashes he rained down on it, his bolo just bounced off. It was useless against the thick and scaly skin, and his bolo got well nicked. The animal, probably realizing that his adversary had evil intentions, retaliated with a strong lash of the tail aimed at his enemy. Luckily, however, it was the handalamay bush that was hit, for Inting happened to be near it. Because of the force, the tree was broken in two, and the tail went through to his body; and it was enough to make Inting fall. The crocodile stepped towards his opponent in order to finish him off. Luckily, however, Inting's neighbors arrived, having heard Angkay's cries for help. Death was cheated.

From that time on, the beast went around defiant of anyone and everything. There was no man he respected who was enough to inspire him with fear. He had no fear at all to steal the people's animals whenever he felt hungry, day or night.

It was a brainy animal, too, because when a platoon of Philippine Constabulary men took time to watch out for him, he did not appear until the servants of the law had gotten fed up. The villagers had already tried many different ways of capturing the ferocious animal, but all failed. More than once they baited it with a small pig in the stomach of which they had put ten pingpong balls. (This is like dynamite but without powder. They are called pingpong balls because they are of the same size as pingpong balls.) But it just went bad. The sly one would not bite at all.

Quite a number of the inhabitants changed their residence now because of fear, and quite a number of Inting's animals had been devoured by the crocodile.

His neighbors were afraid because this, they said, was not an ordinary animal. There were many who had seen and swore for sure that the beast had a red string tied around its neck. The rumors multiplied, especially among the gullible, that this crocodile was the pet of "one unlike us" [supernatural being]. And who would not believe it? Who would be crazy enough to tie something around the crocodile's neck?

The people grew more and more afraid when Sinoy got sick after he had shot the crocodile. Even though he used double zero bullets in his shotgun, it just smoked, he said. Not a feather fell off him. That night Sinoy had to be revived, and because of the implorations and the kneelings of Eduardo, the folk doctor, he was saved from sudden death, after they had offered up a roasted pig, black all over, which had a spot on its forehead.

Whether it was somebody's pet or not, it did not diminish Inting's hatred at all. He had already sworn on the body of his beloved child that he would avenge her even if he was to give his life . . in exchange.

"I include in death even the master of that crocodile," he vowed.

Therefore, he racked his brains looking for a way to fulfill his revenge. There were nights when he slept very little thinking over and over on his plans.

At Sario's Inting had a piece of steel forged as big around as a thumb, two feet long; and on each end he had it bent into a shape like a fishhook. In the middle there was put a place to tie things to. After it had been forged, he bought a chain which was what he tied to the middle.

When he arrived at their place, he ordered Angkay to go right away to Senyong and Mingo's house in order that they might hire them to help. When Angkay had gone, he went into the pigpen and caught a piglet. What he had had forged he tied firmly alongside the pig's body, and he saw to it that it could not be pushed aside, could not loosen or come off. No sooner had he finished his job when Senyong and Mingo arrived. After they were told what they were to do, Senyong carried the pig on his shoulder, and they followed him, Mingo, carrying the plow rope, and Inting, carrying the axe on his shoulder.

They were headed for the edge of the river where their quarry usually passed. A lanzones tree, as big as a leg around in the middle, was what they chose to make into a spring pole. Therefore, Mingo cut the branches from it. Then he tied the rope to the tip of the lanzones tree. To the middle of that rope, Inting attached the trigger of molave wood as big around as a child's arm and one foot long. After Mingo had tied it, the three of them pulled on the rope together until the tree was bent. It was just slightly short of touching the ground.

Inting hooked the trigger to the root of the molave. Then across the trigger they placed a piece of wood which they reckoned would surely not break and which was big enough to restrain the spring and the thrashing of the pig which they tied at the end of the rope. They reckoned it so that when the pig would be jerked and pulled, the bar or crosspiece of the lever would break, and the spring pole would snap into place. They also reckoned the length of the rope so that when the spring pole would snap into place, it would be just the right length so that the pig's feet would not touch the ground.

For one week Inting had been visiting the fish trap, but nothing at all had entered it yet. Luckily, however, each time he visited it, he brought the pig some large ears of corn. If he had not, it would have been dead long ago.

Now Inting was sitting on the topmost step of their house, continually looking into the distance, as if he were looking to see if there was a man about to arrive. His right hand kept holding the handle of his bolo which he was wearing about his waist now. Angkay was there also, squatting in the corner, resting her chin on her two knees like a chicken with cholera. No one dared to disturb the silence aside from the snoring of their children who were just curled up on the floor - poor things, without even having a mat spread out for them and also without having eaten supper. Even the earthworms and the katydids also forgot to sing their usual shrill songs. Perhaps they too understood the sorrow of the couple. Therefore, they joined in their sorrows.

"What actually happened to you in the Chief's office, Ting?" Angkay broke the silence in a weak voice.

Inting turned around gradually, and after he let out a long sigh, said,

"When I arrived, Mr. Alog was already there. After I greeted the chief and let him know that I was the one he had had called, he said to me right away,

"It is good that you have finally come. We have been waiting for you for quite some time now. Here is Mr. Alog in the office complaining that you are his tenant and would not give him his share. What have you to say to that?!"

Inting took a deep breath. Then he continued, "I was startled, Kay, at what the Chief said, and I answered right away, 'Whoever said, sir, that I am a tenant?'

"'Mr. Alog,' answered the Chief.

"'No sir. We bought it from Mr. Alog,' I answered.

"'Where is the proof that you bought it?' he asked me.

"'There is not any actually, sir, because I just trusted him. It is good for children making agreements.'

"I told the Chief, Kay, what had happened and about what Mr. Alog had done. Then that devil, Alog, just up and laughed. How nice it would have been to choke him. If the Chief had not been there, I would have been a murderer now."

The barrio lieutenant had even gone along because he is the one who knows the way around. I also told him that the inspector had even had us come back many times. Then, Kay, the cheater just up and laughed out loud. He said I sure was good in making up explanations. Jesus! How my blood boiled! And the Chief told me that we could really be forced to get out because he said this land had been registered in Mr. Alog's name. And I told the Chief frankly that I would not get out no matter what happened."

"What are lawyers, Ting?"

"You know, they say . . ." And Inting could not finish because they heard the squealing of the pig. Then it was replaced by . . . thudding and booming sounds like a herd of carabao that had escaped from the corral, butting each other.

"The trap!" shouted Inting, when he had ascertained that that was where the noise came from.

"Come on, Kay. Light the two torches because I am going to get the axe." He moved about aimlessly commanding his wife.

What met their eyes was the crocodile as big around as the trunk of a buri palm writhing about.

Blood was flowing everywhere from his mouth, blood from the pig that was there in his throat mixed with his own blood, for he was badly wounded in the throat which was pierced by the two steel hooks which stuck in the roof of his mouth. Grass was flattened, bamboos were broken as he rolled upon them with his body tossing about in pain and as he lashed them with his saw-like tail. But no matter how he strained, jumped about, the plow rope did not break, and the chain and rope buzzed like the guy ropes of a boat that was overtaken by a gale; and the spring pole swayed back and forth.

Immediately Inting called his remaining neighbors, and it did not take long before they were all there gathered together. Without wasting time, they ganged up to kill the monster. Some clubbed the back using the pestle they had brought.

Others, the head. And Inting was like an angry lion. Using all his strength, he pitilessly beat the enemy with his axe.

The crocodile let out all sorts of cries as it was hit by the clubs and axe. Screeching, scratching, and piercing to the ears, the sounds emitted by the beast were like the lowing of cattle. All of Inting's rage was centered on the beast.

For him, it was not only a crocodile that had a red thread tied around it that was his adversary now, but also the crocodile with a golden necklace, Mr. Alog.

Inting sweated marbles after the horrifying struggle with death. He fanned himself with his torn buri hat in order to relieve his breathlessness and exhaustion. Because because of the fulfillment of his vow, the anger which he had felt before was relieved. Now he reflected that no matter how clever he turned out to be, no matter how powerful, no matter how strong, there would always come a time for his downfall.

The crocodile with the necklace of red thread which was reputed to be unbeatable because it had an extraordinary power, was brought down by his hands, not by means of a contest of strength or hot temper , but by means of brains. There was no doubt. The second crocodile that wore a golden necklace, despite the power which he possessed, despite his alertness and cleverness, and despite whatever he had to fall back on, would still be brought to a downfall by him. For he believed that in this world not all men are like Mr. Alog. There are always people with golden hearts who know how to sympathize with him, who know how to help him.
